Forecast for Sunday 11 Sep 2022

Weather: Some early morning mist and fog patches soon lifting leaving the Brecon Beacons dry with sunny spells. Cloud tending to increase from the west from late morning with mostly overcast but bright skies during the afternoon. There is an outside chance of a little light rain or drizzle here and these across western peaks such as Fan Hir, Black mountain or Waun Lefrith.

Chance of cloud-free hill tops above 600m: 70% reducing to 40% from late afternoon.

Low cloud and visibility: After the clearance of any early morning mist or fog patches, visibility will mostly be very good across the Brecon Beacons. During the afternoon cloud will increase but the cloud base will remain well above the summits until late afternoon, early evening when bases drop towards 500-600 meters in places. Visibilities also reducing a little, particularly with any light rain or drizzle.

Meteorologist's View

Although it is likely to feel pleasant in any sunshine in the valleys, temperatures will remain on the cool side near to the hill tops, so some warm clothing is still advised. Conditions are also likely to deteriorate towards the late afternoon, early evening which could make a descent off of the summits more challenging.
